The rec12(+) gene of Schizosaccharomyces pombe encodes a mitogen-activated protein kinase kinase kinase (MAPKKK). The sequence of the catalytic domain predicts that it is a monomeric protein composed of 130 amino acids. This protein has no significant similarity to MAPKKs other than the presence of a serine/threonine kinase catalytic domain. The rec12(+) gene encodes a second kinase, which is closely related to the rec12(+) product, and which has a predicted alpha-helical protein kinase domain. The two kinases are more similar to each other than to other proteins in databases, suggesting that their sequences diverged by gene duplication from a single ancestral kinase. The two kinases are poorly conserved throughout evolution, but a short stretch in the C-terminal portion of the protein is invariant. The Saccharomyces cerevisiae homologs of these kinases were also cloned and sequenced. Their predicted kinase domains are also monomeric and they contain serine/threonine kinase catalytic domains. The mitotic cell cycle of the rec12(+) mutant was similar to that of the mitotic cell cycle of wild-type cells. These results imply that MAPKKs may be involved in regulating mitotic
